“ I know this is many months later. I honestly only found out on May 19th, his would have been birthday. I went to post something on his wall & seen all of "I miss you's". My eyes started to tear up. I knew Rich for 18-19 years. We met in a Yahoo Art Chat room, along with a couple/few other people. Only 4 of us truly stuck together through the changing of social media, or at least I hung onto 3 others in the last 19 years, and Rich was one of them. He more or less forced me through social media sites. I loved it though. He's the one that talked me into meeting my now husband. I also recall the interesting, busting of balls we had towards this one other person in the Art Chat room we were in together. It was him, my now husband, another friend of ours, and myself all trying to get this one dude to stop acting like a moron by showing him how much of a moron he was but he was just too stupid to see it. It just made us all laugh way too much. It was certainly one of those things that you needed to be there to see it see how funny it was. I recall the time Rich drew a picture for me, as I am sure he did for so many of his friends & family. Now I just cannot seem to find it. Makes me really sad. Rich really was an amazing friend. I am glad that I was able to know him & for so long as well. It really did hurt finding out that he left us all. It was like a truck hitting me. I've lost so very much over the last 5 1/2 years, now he has been added to those losses. To all of Rich's family & friends, I am so deeply sorry for your loss. He was truly the greatest man ever!

“ I have some very fond memories from my days living on Thompson. St... Rich lived around the corner from my Step Families home.

I can still see him pulling up out front in his little Pinto Wagon.

He was always smiling and so much fun to be around.

We called him Radar, because he showed up one day wearing a green Army jacket with a cap similar to Radar on MASH..!!

The nickname stuck, and it fit him perfectly.

So long, Rich... Make some beautiful art when you get there my friend. ❤️ 😊

My condolences to the Family. May you find the strength and comfort you need during this hardship.
